Fiorano al Serio, february 21, 2004

Dear Sirs,

Russia is a great country, and like such, a country of great faith, great history but also of great suffering. The Czars undertook the way of the largeness and of the prosperity and today, if that way had not been brutally interrupted from the communist hand, sure we would have of forehead to our eyes not so much ruins, and we would sure have today less hunger, less misery. For this reason your job is praiseworthy, because it searches the truth and it re-establish through the intellectual effort, that tie which never went destroyed between the people and its Czar. In the name of the Institute of the Royal House of Savoia, I send you the best congratulations for this important goal and I wish for the future much satisfactions and as many successes.
